At commencement he was awarded a major in Engineering Sciences and was the recipient of the Ginsburgh Award as Editor of POLARIS. Following leave, he will report to Reese AFB, Texas, to begin pilot training.

The Air Force Academy, near Colorado Springs, Colorado, has a carefully balanced four-year curriculum designed to educate, train and motivate young men for lifetime careers as Air Force officers. It is neither a scientific nor liberal arts program, but a combination of both. Estabitshed in 1955, the Academy has now graduated four classes and will reach its full authorized strength of over 2,500 cadets this summer, with the admission of the new class. Most graduates complete Air Force pilot training after leaving the Academy.
